

B/C GIRLS CAMPS

6-foot-7 Georgeann Wells puts on slam-dunk display for B/C campers.

From '85 B/C All-Star to '90 National Player of the Year: Jennifer Azzi led Stanford to NCAA Women's Championship.

Summer of '92 Girls Sessions

B/C All-Stars, entering its 14th girls year, represents a unique concept in basketball camps — a melting pot of the nation's premier underclass high school players in an atmosphere of intense competition and learning.

The camp is designed to serve as a gathering point for high-potential young players who seldom are exposed to big-time summertime competition and instruction.

Last summer, the best players from 40 states and D.C. spent three weeks attending the 13th annual B/C All-Stars Basketball Camps in Georgia, Indiana and Pennsylvania. This summer will be a star-studded repeat (see dates at right).

Only the elite of the high school basketball world will attend B/C All-Stars. Student-athletes who will be seniors, juniors, sophomores or freshmen in 1992-93 are eligible to participate. The cost is $320.

B/C All-Stars clearly ranks at the forefront of summer basketball camps. Here is a capsule summary of what B/C has to offer:

- ✓ Unsurpassed quality of instruction from a staff of 72 prominent high school coaches representing 21 states plus 30 standout college counselors. This teaching team will be augmented by lectures from some of the basketball world's most dynamic speakers with topics ranging from academics to weight training to NCAA regulations.

- ✓ Upgraded level of competition, allowing participants to engage in daily head-to-head encounters with players of equal or superior skills. Each camper plays four games daily in addition to receiving extensive fundamental station drills, team practice and individual instruction.

- ✓ Unmatched level of talent and size. For years USA Today and Parade Magazine All-American teams have been dotted with B/C products. The 1990 and 1991 Wade Trophy winners, Jennifer Azzi of Stanford and Daedra Charles of Tennessee, attended B/C. We serve as the training ground for All-Staters and All-Americans!

- ✓ Unique exposure from college coaches on all levels in a rigidly enforced no-personal-contact setting. Over the past half-dozen years, an average of 356 college coaches have visited each summer, including virtually all 48 schools participating in the 1992 NCAA Tournament!

That's a dynamite package, geared toward an overriding goal: to make the talented young player markedly more proficient through a one-week cram course.

Jackie Joyner-Kersey, heptathlon world record-holder, is B/C grad.

Tennessee's '91 Wade Trophy winner Daedra Charles: 3-time B/C Top 20.

Virginia All-American Dawn Staley: B/C in '87, Final Four MVP in '91.
